

AETHER

A GRAND HOTEL · THE HOUR BETWEEN

AETHER

A destination held in the last blue hour of the day — lit from within,
and built for the evening you remember.

THE HOTEL

ARRIVE AS THE LIGHT TURNS GOLD.

Aether is a grand house for the in-between hour — when the sky deepens to ink and the windows warm to gold. A hundred rooms, a great lobby, a table and a spa, set high above a still landscape. We keep the lights low and the welcome high.

THE LOBBY

A HOUSE LIT FROM WITHIN.

You come up the drive as the blue hour settles and the whole house is glowing — the forecourt pool holds the last of the sky, and the doors are already open.

NO. 1

THE CLOUD SUITE.

The highest room in the house, where the windows run floor to ceiling and the view falls away to the hills. A fire lit, the lamps low, the city coming on far below.

THE VIEW

BEYOND THE GLASS, THE HOUR HOLDS.

Mountains, a still lake, mist in the valleys and the last warm light on the peaks — the landscape Aether was built to watch.

DINING

A TABLE BY CANDLELIGHT.

Dinner begins as the windows go dark and the candles come up — a long, unhurried table under a gilded ceiling.

THE BAR

THE EVENING, EXTENDED.

When the table clears, the bar keeps the night going — backlit gold, deep ink, a slow last hour.

THE SPA

STILL WATER, LOW LIGHT.

Below the house, a candle-lit pool and the quiet of warm stone — the slow part of the evening, kept apart from the rest of it.

OUT OF DOORS

TERRACE & POOL.

Lanterns on the terrace and a still pool holding the sky — the evening, taken outside.

A photograph of a hotel suite interior. Large glass doors are open, revealing a private terrace with a city view at night. The terrace is decorated with several ornate lanterns. The interior of the suite is elegantly furnished with a sofa, armchair, and side tables, all illuminated by warm, ambient lighting. The view outside shows a city skyline and mountains under a deep blue twilight sky.

NO. 11

AN EVENING IN THE OPEN AIR.

The Terrace Suite opens — glass doors folded back onto a private terrace strung with lanterns, the blue hour coming straight in.

HOW WE HOST

FROM THE DRIVE TO THE LAST LIGHT.

WELCOME. The doors open before you reach them; the house already lit.

DINE. A table by candlelight, and a bar that keeps the night.

SETTLE. A room held for the evening, turned down, the view yours.

REST. Still water below, low light above, morning in no hurry.

THE HOUR BETWEEN

AND BEYOND THE GLASS,
THE HOUR HOLDS.
